

Short Bio:

Matteo Battaglia, energy engineer with a Master degree in “Renewable Systems” at Polytechnic University of Turin, is attending the PhD course in “Materials for Sustainable Development” at University of Rome Tor Vergata. In collaboration with ENEA, he is focusing his studies on hydrogen production, thermal water splitting processes exploiting perovskites materials, characterization and modeling of thermal energy storage materials.