Ph.D. student in Chemical Process for Industry and Environment at Sapienza University of Rome, in collaboration with ENEA (Italian National Agency for New Technologies, Energy and Sustainable Economic Development). He graduated in 2023 with a degree in Industrial Chemistry, specializing in Polymeric Materials. His research focuses on carbonaceous materials for energy storage devices; specifically, he works on the synthesis and characterization of hard carbon for sodium-ion batteries to optimize porosity and improve electrochemical performance.